The question how to best see the Inauguration parade is one that agitates the mind of the denizen of the Capital every four years. There are any number of places from which it may be seen, but the idea is to get the best view for the least money, and you may trust the permanent residenter for that. He is an old campaigner and knows more than the average man about pageants and parades. The stranger within our gates will have to suffer, however.
He doesn't know the ropes, and it is perfectly natural that he should have to pay to learn them.
Knowing nothing about the fickleness of Washington weather in March the country cousin will more than likely have a seat upon one of the numerous stands that are now being erected upon stands that are now being erected upon every available location along the route of the parade. He would pay his $1, $2, or $3, as the case may be, stumble over the bleaching boards, and rest his weary bones upon the hard undressed seats, there to freeze, or soak, or sunburn while he waits perhaps hours for

He has got into the spider's parlor, but he won't find many Washington-ians there. They know the stands of old; perhaps became acquainted with them at some Inauguration in the dim and distant past. Those of them who have taken the trouble to investigate also know that the records of the Weather Bureau show there have been but two clear days falling on the 4th of March in the last thirty years.

It may be that this is a good reason why the coming day should be fair;

everybody hopes so, but the ground-hog has spoken and it looks dubious. The day may open fine enough, but no one knows what it may bring forth. So the stranger contemplating a visit in the open air had better take Mark Twain's. prescription for the cure of a Washing-ton March and bring along a linen duster and a heavy overcoat, a palm-leaf fan and a good, warm comforter, a straw hat and a fur cap, and maybe if he is subject to colds a bottle of Con-

Knowing the Washington March as he does, the Washingtonian doesn't trust it and he wants a roof to shelter him. It will be he and his friends who will take to the windows. And these windows along the line of parade will rival in attractions the parade itself. Bright eyes will flash down upon the gallant troopers and the surging crowd beneath, merry laughter will ring out after some devoted couple from Wayback and fun will rule the day. The lookers on are not to be impressed with the fact that the ruler of a great nation is being inaugurated; they a great nation is being inaugurated; they lose sight of that fact altogether in looking at the sights. Many of the gay parties in the front rooms will spend the day and have dinner sent to them. A CRITIC reporter took a stroll along the line of the parade for the purpose of finding out what arrangements were being made for the reception of visitors by the window renters. Upon nearly every available house was tacked a sign Rooms and windows for rent.' indow to $50 for an entire room. private parties are on the less important streets, the great majority of those on the Avenue having been leased by a company who are trying to make a cor-ner in desirable windows. This is a new wrinkle in Inauguration business, and the reporter sought out the gentle-man who is at the head of the scheme. He also runs a bureau for the renting of windows, and for a small per cent. will take all the trouble out of the householder's hands. "The demand for front rooms and windows this year has been unpre-cedented," said the gentleman, "and it is getting greater every day. The prices are going up, and a window that might have been rented two weeks ago might have been rented two weeks ago for $5 now brings $10 without any trouble. Yes, we rent a great many rooms to parties, and the prices realized are good. In some cases the rent of the room for a few hours on Inauguration Day will be sufficient to pay for it two or three months. Most of the renters are Washington people who will have friends visiting."

THE LITTLE WIDOW.

The twilight of mid July was full of THE METHOD ADOPTED BY THE tender, opal brightness; the scent of new mown hay, coming down from faroff breezy slopes, floated in the air, and just beyond the e'ms in the hollow the full moon was rising up, a great globe of pearl. And from her low sent be neath the over-hanging honeysuckles Pertha Wyman saw and felt all this summer Leauty with the faint, blissful anguor of a tropic dream.

Paul Fordham crossed the broad ribbon of moonlight that fluttered over the playza and came to sit down at his

'Husb, who is that?" she said, with a little start, as a light footstep sounded on the matted hall beyond. "Only your aunt's companion, Mrs.

Raymond. By the way, Bertha, what a very interesting little thing she is—such a child widow, with those big, black eyes, and the heavy lashes that seem actually to weigh down her eye lids! She makes me think of one of those exquisite South American birds, all grace and sparkle."
"I never could account for the taste of you men," said Bertha, half con-temptuously.

"No, but she is a beauty, by Jove! I can tell you what, my fair Saxon empress, if I hadn't lost my heart irrevocably to you, long before I ever saw Mrs. Raymond, there's no telling what

She went up to her own apartment earlier than usual that evening, not be-cause she was particularly weary, but because she wanted to punish Paul Fordham, who was fond of moonlight and sentiment and delicious July evenings, for his unwarrantable notice of he aunt's dark-eyed companion.

As she sat at the window, brushing cut the wavy, feathery gold of her mag nificent hair, the sound of voices on the piazza below arrested her attention. She listened a moment, holding the golden masses away from her head, with her scarlet lips half apart. It was Paul Fordham and Zaidee Raymond.

"I thought so," she murmured, under her breath. "It would be no bad specu lation for the poverty-stricken widow to wile Paul Fordham and his wealth into her nets. I knew she was artful, despite her innocent, childish ways; but if she dare come into collision with me she shall be crushed—crushed as I would strike a noisome insect to the ground. She sat there, silent and motionless, for well-nigh half an hour; then there came a soft tap at her chamber door,

"Come in," said Bertha. And Mrs. Raymond entered.

"I beg your pardon for disturbing you, Miss Raymond, but were you aware that you had left your bracelet on the piazza floor? Here it is."

"It takes you and Mr. Fordham some time to discover the loss of a bracelet, said Bertha, tauntingly. sorry to have given you the trouble of so lengthened a search." Zaidee Raymond's check flushed painfully.

"If you would but allow me to confide in you, Miss Wyman," she faltered, drawing a step or two nearer to the haughty Saxon beauty. Mr. Fordham has told me-

"I do not wish to become the reposi-tory of your confidence," said Bertha, with chilling abruptness, "nor do I care what Mr. Fordham chooses to tell you.

And she motioned Mrs. Raymond im peratively from her presence.

"I dare say," said Bertha, turning abruptly away. "The breeze is too strong out here. I think I had better go back to the library." Paul stared at his companion in utter bewilderment.

"I suppose that means she doesn't want to talk any more about Zaidee Raymond. Well, of all incomprehensible creatures a woman is the most in-comprehensible! They're leagues and leagues beyond my penetration, the whole race of them. I supposed she would be interested; and here she snaps my head off before I get out a dozen

And Paul followed Bertha to the library, confused and not altogether pleased at the arbitrary decisiveness of the beautiful blonde.

It was about a week afterward that Bertha Wyman was coming home from a long walk to a distant farm house, where an old schoolmate of hers re-sided. She had refused Paul Ford-ham's escort, probably because she had seen him walking up and down the long hall with Mrs. Raymond at his side that very morning; and now she felt a little wearied, somewhat lonely and very cross. The sun had been down about half an hour, but the west was still illuminated with a belt of orange brightness, and the winding river, tangled along the shore with starry water lilies, reflected the warm glow of the sky like a second firma-

As Bertha descended into a little wooded hollow, fragrant with wild roser—for—she—had avoided the thoroughfare, unfrequented though itwas, and chosen instead a shaded by-path—she became conscious that two other persons were strolling along the read itself, from which she was only read itself, from which she was only divided by a tangled mass of wild grape-vines festooned from the slender branches of a few silver hirches—two other persons—Paul Fordham and Zaidee Raymond.

The color died away from Bertha's somewhat flushed cheek, as she paused to listen; as they, too, had paused where two roads separated.

"We must not walk any farther to gether," said Paul's voice. "Nobody is to suspect anything yet, you know.

gether," said Paul's voice. "Nobody is to suspect anything yet, you know. We will surprise them." And then came Zaidee's soft, hesitating laugh. "It seems like a dream, Mr. Ford But you will find it, I hope, a happy reality," he said, looking tenderly down upon her bowed head. "You do not regret trusting in me?"

"Oh!" she murmured, "I never dreamed that earth had so much happi-

The storm of hot, unreasoning fury that raged in her breast seemed to shake her slight frame as a leaf is shaken before the equinoctial gale; her face was whiter than monumental marble, and her eyes literally blazed with blue, bale-ful fire. At that instant there was mur-der in Bertha Wyman's heart. She hurried down the twilight glade, the thorns tearing her dress, the briers wounding her delicate flesh, but she felt them no more than if they had been rose petals blown toward her by the evening breeze. Some strong, savage purpose was maturing in her mind— some overmastering passion held her whole being in its grasp.

She knew that to strike into the right road Zaidee would ere long take the secluded path she herself was treading. Her sole aim was to reach the tiny foot bridge which crossed the narrow river And she succeeded. It was quite dark—the fragrant, starry darkness of a midsummer night—when she hurried down the deep, shelving bank. "The planks are old and ruinous," she murmured, "They shook and rattled under my feet as I passed over to-day. Zaidee Raymond shall come between me and my plighted lover no found it out? Clifford, my cousin Clif-ford, wrote to me from India, and he is ford, wrote to me from India, and he is her husband. You see, there was some misunderstanding, some absurd quarrel between them before the honeymoon was over. He was a jealous fool, and she was passionate, and she ran away and left him. He somehow heard that she was in this portion of the country and wrote to me. Of course the minute I got a chance to speak to her I knew it I got a chance to speak to her I knew it was Zaidee. And she is the happiest little creature in the world to think he really loves her, and next week she's going out to him. I've managed it all. Don't you think I'm a pretty good

His face was fairly radiant with hon-est pleasure as he tooked down into Bertha's face. She did not see the gaze; her eyes, wide open and dilated, were fixed on vacancy and her face was deadly white.

hour of her life.

When she rose the next morning she looked as if an illness of months had passed over her head. "How ill you look, dear," said her aunt, 'I'm afraid that walk was too much for you yesterday. And it's so strange that Zaidee did not come home

'Strange!" As Bertha closed her heavy eyes she almost seemed to see the dead face, turned upward, among the water-lilies, with its wealth of jety hair tangled amid the wreathed stems. Oh, God! as long as she lived that white face would haunt her waking or sleeping hours

Would it be long before they found the corpse? Would they bring it up the flowery lawn with the long hair dripping? Or would it float there for days, perhaps, in that lonely spot? Why, Zaidee, where have you been ill this time?" Bertha started up with a wild, hysteric scream. It was her aunt's voice, and Zaidee stood in the midst of them with blooming cheeks and soft dimpling

"At Farmer Geary's, to be sure. It was so dark when I passed there last night that the kind souls insisted on my staying there with them until morning. And to the lucky ones whose standings are high enough, so that they don't have to be examined, "Mattnee Friday" is a holiday. About one-fifth of the High School boys and girls fell below in their markings this year, and to them it is "Black Friday," for they all will have to undergo a rigid examination. It is usual too that a considerable pro-It is usual, too, that a considerable pro-portion of the scholars who fall behind on Black Friday fail to make the proper standing for graduation at the end of the year. They have to do a lot of extra studying, and to fail on this ex-amination is really quite a catastrophe to a High School scholar.
